Dear Senator Baker:

It was with great delight and pleasure that I read of your appointment by President Reagan as Chief of Staff to the White House Executive Offices. I know that in these trying times for the Executive you will bring to this office the cool, professional, competent and knowledgeable services that has been so identified with your style.

It has been many years since we were students at Tennessee and it is always exciting to read of your successes and accomplishments. I trust you and your family are in good health.

Very sincerely and respectfully,

Dear Howard:

I was in Baltimore and Washington on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of the past week attending meetings of The Business Council and the Board of Trustees of The Brookings Institution, as well as visiting the businesses located there we acquired in 1986: the Baltimore Sun, the National Journal and Broadcasting magazine. In the aftermath of the Tower Commission Report and the discussions I participated in, I left Washington feeling very discouraged.

When we landed in Los Angeles, I learned that you were to be Chief of Staff. To say that my mood changed dramatically for the better is an understatement.

All Americans are once again in your debt. God bless you and good luck.

Warmest regards,

Dear Howard,

As Presidential chief of staff you have one advantage none of your predecessors ever had --

When the tough challenges confront you, it will be possible for you to reflect on what your esteemed Father and Father-in-law would have recommended in dealing with problems of a similar character. That guidance should be virtually infallible. In fact as I think about it, you may not have to seek their guidance; those two statesmen may be "nudging" you right now! Certainly the distinguished examples of those two great Americans will help you in your decision making. I also know they are justly proud of you and your willingness to serve. To some acquaintances I have sent the attached.

To the President, his Administration, and to you, I wish

Godspeed,
Tom

ON LETTING BAKER BE REGAN

The accession of Howard H. Baker, Jr., (HHB) to the position of White House Chief of Staff, ~~Vice~~ Donald T. Regan (DTR), prompts this evaluative assay. The conjectures and conclusions are solely my own based on personal subjective observation and impression. I know nothing that is not in the public domain, but I may put known facts together differently from others and my inferences from those facts may lead to different conclusions.

THE SUCCESSOR: HHB is one in a mere handful of Americans who is currently qualified to be President of the United States in his own right. His integrity, principle, and patriotism will cause him to use his exceptional talents in the loyal discharge of his chief-of-staff duties unstintingly and selflessly to restore validity and vitality to the Reagan Presidency.

He possesses all the qualifications that are required for success in his endeavor. If he does not succeed, the fault will not be his. HHB is profoundly knowledgeable and experienced in the affairs of State and the exigencies of high public office. He is honorable, intelligent, tough minded, hard working, articulate, persuasive, skilled in leadership, and adept at negotiation.

He blends principle and pragmatism to achieve the best obtainable result in areas of contention and controversy; he has a keen judgment when evaluating whether confrontation or compromise is the wiser course. The Executive powers of advocacy and veto will be skillfully employed under his guidance. The contractionists, expansionists, populists, ideologues, pragmatists, partisans, and mugwumps should give "The Successor" a chance to succeed.

THE RESTORATION: The President of the United States (RWR) must recognize his future conduct in office will determinatively influence the ability of the reorganized White House staff to assist him in the last two years of his now beleaguered Presidency. Without becoming a "detail-nitpicker", RWR must give the impression of a "hands-on" leader actively involved in the formulation and implementation of major policy decisions. He cannot delegate his obligation to reassure the American people and, indeed, the people of the world, that he is in charge of his Administration. This will be difficult to accomplish because of RWR's long-standing method of operation and because of persisting obsessive preoccupation with this point by the media piranhas.

The Nation's First Lady must abet and not hinder this restoration process. She was without question one of the instigators of the "laid-back" or "hands-off" style of Presidential detachment that permitted the current difficulties to arise. That inhibiting intrusion must end immediately. The President must be allowed to be, and must want to be President, and I am not certain the "allowing" and "wanting" motivational criteria will withstand the tests and the challenges of the future. Those uncertainties may repress the efficacy of the restoration endeavor.

HHB must deal with unerring deftness in the selection of personnel to assist him. The designation of the White House Counsel will be a key appointment in view of the foreseeable problems confronting the Executive. If further damaging disclosures emanate from the ongoing Iran/Contra investigations, they will have to be met with sure-handed commensurate decisiveness on a forthright basis regardless of the perpetrator's identity.

In the future the Vice President and the Cabinet members should be more actively involved in White House operations. There is no doubt they would constructively respond if not intentionally excluded by the President's staff. RWR and HHB should aggressively seek this fuller participation by these talented people. Cabinet meetings should occur regularly and the cabinet members should be present on the job in Washington more consistently.

The President should call upon the Cabinet to work more diligently in resolving inter-departmental differences and, where that cannot be accomplished, to bring the areas of disagreement to the White House promptly for resolution. The Cabinet and subcabinet should provide a strong nucleus for the White House restoration effort in the Executive branch.

One of HHB's greatest contributions to the Reagan Presidency will be in the area of improved Executive relations with the Legislative branch. That observation is not intended to suggest a sudden rapprochement between the Reagan Administration and the Democrat-controlled Congress. It only suggests that on essential matters stalemate can be avoided; and nonessential distractions can be left to the legislative noisemakers and the beltway media.

The Congressional Democratic majorities will continue to press their programs and policies but a new "conciliatory" spirit in the White House may be matched by a temporary "cooperative" attitude in the Congress. The surcease in partisan strife will have a scope and life expectancy that will be influenced by the strength of the Reagan resurgence. Early insights into these trends can be derived from actions on the budget resolutions (including tax proposals) in the next six weeks and on the public debt ceiling legislation by mid-May when a $300-plus billion increase may be necessary.

One final comment on the restoration: Adverse events affecting the Reagan Presidency could move swiftly; a revitalization would require a more protracted period. It is not certain which way events will lead, but I am concerned it may be the former unless those of us who believe in the President and his program assert our support for him without any quibbles about ideological fine points and without distractions based on personal ambitions.

THE NOMINATIVE IMPACT: The impact on the G.O.P. Presidential sweepstakes of the events leading to the appointment of HHB as

White House Chief of Staff has its interesting aspects. HHB has had a long-standing aspiration to be President of the United States. As noted earlier in this commentary, he is a person eminently qualified to fill that position. Punditry pronounced him out of contention with the announcement of his White House staff appointment. The pundits are wrong.

HHB will not seek the nomination but his performance in his new office may provide the margin of difference in bestowing an unsolicited nomination on him. There are many ways this can happen; e.g. utilization of favorite son candidacies by his supporters, a convention deadlock, operation of the Twenty-fifth Amendment, etc. I do not know what the nominative situation will be a year-plus from this writing but it may be unwise to conclude that a truly qualified man will not be considered for the highest public office America can bestow upon one of its most distinguished citizens.

Dear Senator:

Just a note of sincere "Thanks" for taking this job offered by the President.

Many of us in the South who are loyal GOPers honestly believe you can and will,

"Rescue Mr. Reagan"

Without question, despite any and all mistakes, he has served our nation admirably; just look at Carter bank interest and the Carter economy including inflation and thereafter take a look at Reagan's economics.

Of all the politico's I know, you are best suited and equipped to salvage the Reagan Administration and create viability in the National Party.

Even the hard hard right Republicans (despite their willingness to fight any and all who don't hue to their ultra strict line of narrow minded conservatism) in private admit you are the Fireman who is so well equipped to fight the fire.

It's been many a moon since I had you visit with us here in Columbus speaking to the Georgia State Republican Annual Convention. In fact, your illustrious father-in-law spoke thereafter to our next Georgia gathering in Atlanta.

This note is just to let you know that there are genuine Republicans classified by some as middle-of-the-roaders, who recognize your ability, your political know-how and your knowledge of how to get the job done in Washington.

On behalf of many, please let me extend our mutual "Thanks in Advance" for taking the Chief of Staff's job.

Your appointment as Chief of Staff last week was the best news I have heard this year, and maybe in the past four to five months. Having some first hand knowledge of what this commitment means to you and your family, I know it was not an easy decision.

While I regret we may possibly lose your presence in the Oval Office on a permanent basis for a few years, your many talents, vast credibility and wide respect will do much in putting the Administration back on course. I am reminded of many years ago when I was just joining the White House staff and was first introduced to you by Lamar Alexander and Lee Smith. Time brings back many pleasant memories.

As you embark upon these challenging and difficult tasks, I wish you much success and hope that you won't hesitate to call if there is any way we may ever be able to assist. In the meantime, please give my best to your lovely Joy.
